Susan Ballard is Director of Library Media and Technology Services for the Londonderry School District and is the current chair of AASL's Standards and Guidelines Implementation Task Force, more popularly known as the "Learning 4Life" initiative. Susan also teaches graduate courses at Rutgers University.

Annette Lamb has been a school library media specialist, computer teacher, and professor of education and library science. Annette is well-known for her realistic approaches to technology integration and information inquiry, focusing on practical, technology-rich approaches to teaching and learning. Her roots in library, media, and technology are reflected in her passion for interdisciplinary approaches, reading and writing across the curriculum, and using a variety of resources from books to the Internet. www.eduscapes.com

August 11 — Because the Research Tells Us So...Birds Gotta Fly: School Librarians = Wings, Susan Ballard

Think about it – birds have to leave the nest at some point and the odds are against them; yet with the right preparation they can survive and most importantly, thrive. School Librarians are in a unique position to be the variable in a fledgling student's success, but we have to understand the environment in which they will soar or be grounded and vulnerable. School librarians need to connect the dots between current research and best practice in order to provide solid evidence of effectiveness and sustainability of effort. We matter, and make a difference, and it is time to demonstrate that we can feather the nest for our students as well as nudge them out of it.

August 12 — Strong Nests, Successful Students: Skills & Strategies for 21st Century Learning, Annette Lamb

Birds are constantly rebuilding and strengthening their nests. Strong nests provide a nurturing environment for chicks to grow. The introduction of the revised standards allows us a chance to rebuild our teaching and learning nest. Are you building a strong foundation for your students? Explore practical ideas and strategies for addressing the skills needed by 21st century learners. Through collaborations among media specialists, technology coordinators, administrators, and classroom teachers, we can motivate and challenge students across the curriculum.
